THE NOMINATION OF MCCLELLAN FOR THE PRESIDENCY.

For weeks previous to the meeting of the Chleago Convention It was the subject of considerable public curiosity. There was a gene ral desire to learn what the Opposition to the Administration would propose as their remedy for the Rebellion instead of war, and what statesman they would select as their candidate for the Presidency, with a view to elect him for the purpose of putting their pelicy in execution. The agony of expectation is now over, and we doubt not that the people who have waited so long for the revelation of a plan for the salvation of the country, experience, very generally, a sense of disappointment, and, perhaps, disgust. The incubation was protracted, but the result is confessedly, in every respect, an abortion. "Parturiunt Montes," and so forth.

The Convention first declared its political principles, touching the situation of the country, in a series of resolutions, in which all intelligible meaning is covered up in a cloud of vague words. We shall discuss "the platform" in future articles, wishing now to speak only of the nominations. These present GROBGE B. McCLELLAN for the Presidency, and Mr. PENDLETON, of Ohio, for the Vice Presidency.

The ticket would be much better if the names upon it were transposed. The office of the National Executive requires the talents and experience of a statesman. Among Northern sympathizers with the Rebels Mr. PEN-DLETON has some pretensions to that character, GEORGE B. McCLELLAN has none. But what was wanted by the Convention was, not a man fit for the office, but one supposed to be pessessed of those vulgar elements of popularity which sometimes, by the unthinking enthusiasms of a mob, lift small men into places far above their capacities and deserts. Hence, in this instance, the person least qualified for the Presidential chair was nominated for that station; while he who is, in the schooling of statesmanship, vastly his superior, was accorded a subordinate position. For this, however, the Chicago delegates are responsible to their constituents, and we certainly have no disposition to quarrel with We never have had any but the kindest feelings for General McCLELLAN. He is a Pennsylvanian. He is even nearer to us than that. He is a Philadelphian. We will go further, and say that he rendered the country good service on several occasions, during this war against the Rebellion. We acknowledge his military abilities as displayed in the defense of the city of Washington in the earlier periods of this fearful struggle with Secession, and even his successful, though rather fruitiess, office, by elevating him to a higher? If Modefeat of the forces of General LEE at An- CLELLAN was dishonest and disloyal as a

But when we have said thus much in his favor, we have said all that we can conscientiously say with regard to him, either as a man, a soldier, or a patriot. We wish sincerely that history would allow us to express unqualified approbation of him; that it would warrant us in according to him that unreserved and enthusiastic eulogy with which he is besmeared by the members and journals of that political party who wish to use his supposed popularity with the soldiers of the Union army as a means of carrying the coming national election in favor of their cause and ticket. We honestly and solemnly believe that the very men who most praise McClellan as an available candidate of the Democracy for the Presidency in the approaching canvass, do not really entertain for him the respect which they pretend to feel and so fulsomely express. McClellan is thought to be a convenient and expedient man for their purposes, and they puff, magnify, and exalt him accordingly. But let us deal with him more fairly and disinterestedly. Let us try him by his record. As a military man, what has he done? We venture to assert that no army officer was ever given by the Government anything like the same opportunities that he was afforded to serve the nation and promote his own individual fame and advancement. No commander in the field, except Grant, ever was allowed like forbearance and indulgence, All his successors in the generalship of the "Army of the Potomac," from BURNSIDE to MEADE, never were accorded the same chances to win victories and render them selves historically immortal. Yet Groups B. McClellan never won a decided victory during all his protracted command of the finest military organization that was ever assembled on this continent. He defeated the Rebels at various times-we even concede that he made a masterly retreat from the Peninsula, and saved the army under his command, after several most disastrous repulses. But we declare most positively, and invoke the records of the war to avouch our assertion, that in no single instance did Major General GEORGE B. McCLELLAN properly follow up and reap the true meed of victory in any battle that was ever fought under his auspices and direction.

This is his history, and we are sorry that it is so. We could have wished, and did wish, that it might be otherwise. But fate and GEORGE B. McCLELLAN were against us. We would not, in anything we now say, disparage in the least his military characterbis universally admitted ability as a soldier. But we have always believed that all his military fallures were justly attributable to the fact that his party-leaning and sympathies as a Democrat proved too strong both for his as a general in chief command of the army of Washington, and for his feelings and reputation as a patriot. In his conduct, while in command, he reversed the sentiment of BRUTUS-he loved C.Esan more and Rome less; he cared more for JESPERSON DAVIS and his infamous cause, than he cared for the Government and the Union. This is the judgment that posterity will pass on his conduct and achievements in this war against the Hebellion, and every loyal American, but espement that posterity will pass on his conduct

cially every loyal Pennsylvanian, will deplore

Having falled so signally as a General, what reason is there to hope that McCLELLAN will succeed better as a President? If he was not fit for a calling for which he was specially Whan, payable to the Carter, and mailed to subsciders the requirements of a vocation in which he are fett of the first Carter in Two Months, invariably in advence for the period ordered. better reputation can be hope to win in the highest and most difficult civil trust of the nation? In the business of a statesman he is a perfect novice; and the knowledge which it took WEBSTER and CLAY, and such men, years of study and labor to acquire, GEORGE B. McClellan cannot be expected to gain by sudden inspiration. We do him, therefore, no injustice when we assert that he is totally unsuited for the Presidency, and should not be put by the people in a position whose grave responsibilities are far above his abilities. Even if his patriotism were above suspicion, and it were possible for any man to rely alone on the instincts of that passion to guide him in the execution of the Presidential office, yet GEORGE B. McCLELLAN lacks even the firmness of will to be governed by his own impulses. He has no positiveness in his moral or intellectual composition. He has shown himself to be a hesitating, timid, temporizing person, halting perpetually between two opinions-between what his sense of duty ells him to do, and what his want of moral ourage makes him afraid to do. Thus his owardice, or his indecision of character, is always defeating the dictates of his understanding. Such a negative soul is fit for no place and no occasion demanding resolution like that of JACKSON, and civil wisdom and virtue like that of Washington. His ductile nature, however-his liability to be moulded, like a piece of potter's clay, to any fashion and to any end, by stronger, and yet worse men than himself, is at once the reason why he was nominated for the Presidency by an assemblage of selfish politicians, who hope to use him as a tool, and why he should not be elected to that office by the people. His popularity, moreover, will be found, we think, to be more fictitious than real. It rests not so much on any positive merit, either of character or service, as on a supposed public pity for persecution, of which he is claimed to be the victim. But his martyrdom is of his own making. He was displaced from a command in the army for allowing his private notions of political policy in the conduct of the war, to interfere with his duty as a soldier, and as he failed in his proper office by presuming to exercise the functions of one to which he was not appointed, he was very wisely and justly sent into retirement. It is probable that GEORGE B. McCLELLAN would be to-day in command of the Potomac Army if, stiffing all political ambition and respecting himself the military subordination he imposed on his troops, he had faithfully discharged the duties of his responsible position, and not sought to arrogate the discretion and authority of President LINCOLN. But he tried to reconcile the obligations of a soldier with the aspirations of a politician, and that attempt disastrously sacrificed the cause he was so generously appointed to save. His sudden promotion to high military command-his taste soldier, can be be expected to be honest and loval as a civilian? If he could not fight, unconditionally, for the Union and the Constitution, can it be supposed that he would, as President of the United States, be more devoted to either? But he has been turned out of his command in the field!! Oh! that is terrible, that is monstrous, say the unconditional peace man in the North-the sympathizers with the Rebellion. Well, gentlemen, what of that? Would you have a palterer with treason to fight treason? If you would, let us tell you that the people are not of your way of thinking, and that they are not likely to abet you in avenging the supposed griefs of McClellan, on a Government which treated him with a

Save Your Old Newspapers.

Paper stock dealers pay eight cents a pound for old newspapers in good condition; the material can be made over into white printing paper, and the greater the supply, the less will be the nerease in the price of the new sheet. Wilker' Spirit of this week says on this point :-

Spirit of this week says on this point:—

In Europe, a hotel or househeeper never thinks of destroying a newspaper, or of using it for kindling purposes. All over the continent and in England cheap little bundles of sticks (two or three for a penny), with the ends dipped in rosin, supply all the purposes in the way of kindling which could be performed by five times. The value of white printing paper: while the other uses for paper are met by an inferior brown material, which inflicts no waste upon the printing stock. By this means the major part of the original stock is preserved for reproduction, and the price of the article constantly kept down. By the same thrifty system of saving old nawspapers and handing them over to the dealers, who will be glad to call at private houses for them, nearly the whole market stock will be preserved.

From an officer who has just arrived from the front, we learn some of the particulars of Kil-patrick's late raid on the Atlanta and Mscon railroad. He succeeded in severing the read, tore up over a mile and a half of the track, and burned two large depote containing commissary supplies. A large force of Rebel cavalry made supplies. A large force of Rebel cavary made its appearance, when a fight ensued, resulting in the defeat of the enemy. The Rebel loss amounted to over 600 in killed, wounded, and prisoners; 291 being taken prisoners. The Union loss, all bold, was less than 200. General Kilpatrick, with his command, had arrived safe at Atlanta.—Chattanooya Gazette.

The French use three kinds of coffee, Mocha, The French use three kinds of coffee, Mocha, Java, and Rio, mixed in equal parts. The coffee before roasting is winnowed to cleanse it of dust, &c.; it is then culled or picked over; every black or defective kernel is picked out, as well as small stones, seeds, and rat droppings, which are abundant in most coffee. It is then put into twos of clean water and well washed, then spread to dry; when dry it is ready for roasting.
